Saving electricity

Two month has passed when big tsunami attacked the northern city of Japan. And the problem of Fukushima nuclear power plant has not solved yet. The news is broadcasted over the world, and many people are watching and increasing attention about that. Many citizens living near the plant have to move far to avoid being contaminated by radioactivity. Recently some of our customers ask us to submit the document which is certified our containers loaded after 3.11 are free of contaminants.

The certification based on the environmental radioactivity level in Japan will be issued by the chamber of commerce. This is one of the reliable information as the result of radiation dose which is monitored in the principal city of 47 prefectures in Japan. The record is updated every day on the web site of national institutions. After the nuclear accident, many exporters or suppliers in Japan are demanded the certification from their importers or customers. Of course KAIHO SANGYO will support you. If you need other documents or certification for custom, feel free to contact us!!

Since the nuclear power plant crisis, people and companies all over Japan are becoming increasingly concerned about "Saving electricity" For example, many convenience stores turned off the lights in the daytime. Even at night, they reduced the use of it for a while. Some vending machines on the street were also turned off the display. In our office, we don't use the half or more of the light. There should be more good ways to save electricity. If you have any good idea, please tell me and act from now on.

Our Mr. Buyer

This time Mr, Buyer I want to introduce you is Saifullha san. It has been 12 years when he first came to KAIHO. So he speaks Japanese very well.

Also he appeared on our local TV program which our company was introduced last month. Our staff says, "He is very friendly, and he has a lots of knowledge about parts and engines. He is very shy but his smile makes every one happy!!"

Can you join our project?
